- of the headquarters, except for a guard detail, was employed to reinforce the companies. Patrols or sentries of 2 to 3 men were on duty at irregular intervals. Other patrols had to show up near the border to confuse and capture border crossers. Some patrols had dogs. Nounted patrols were employed in the rear area. In March 1952, the patrols were ordered to avoid reads. Machine guns were set up at bifurcations of the roads whenever intensified patrols were ordered. The patrol areas overlapped at the borders by about 200 to 300 meters.
- 11. Since November 1951, the quarters were fortified by earth shelters for machine guns, trenches 150 cm to 170 cm deep and wire entanglements. The personnel was explicitly informed that fleeing persons could be pursued without danger in the area of each company as no mines were laid anywhere. They were instructed that in case of mobilization the brigade would first be supported by units from Domazlice (Taus) (N 50/P 70), where soldiers with red and red-bordered black epaulets in January 1952.
